

I strongly favor New Jersey's Do-not-call list. Ever since I have signed up for it, I have not been bothered by telemarketers who not only call at all hours of the evening, but also with offers that are of no interest to me 99.9% of the time. With the creation of online shopping and the thousands of stores available, I as a consumer will purchase a good or service if I am interested in it and at my discretion. Therefore, I have no need for telemarketing calls which are not only disruptive, but also a complete waste of time. I am forced to pay surcharges for the FCC on my phone and internet bills, therefore I think the FCC should finally do something which will benefit me and many others, and that is to stop trying to overrule the do-not-call list. This is a free country, and people should have the right to choose whether or not to be contacted about useless offers through phone calls. We already have enough spam, junk mail and ads on tv, the radio and the mass media. Let's put a halt to this nonsense before it reaches our phones as well.
